

At the height of the COVID-19 pandemic, Greg Stanton was collecting his taxpayer salary on a yacht in Utah during a Congressional committee meeting, even casting a vote while there.

BACKUP:

In July 2020, as Arizona was in the midst of a surge in coronavirus cases, Stanton took part in a House Transportation Committee hearing from a boat; at one point, Stanton voted during the hearing:

- In July 2020, Stanton took part in a House Transportation Committee hearing from a boat. “Rep. Greg Stanton drew jeers on Friday for taking part in a House Transportation Committee hearing from a boat, lending a leisurely appearance to a job often held in scorn by the public, especially during a pandemic and recession. At one point, the freshman Arizona Democrat voted during the mostly empty hearing, known as a markup, by videoconference on Wednesday, where his appearance floating on the water seemed to jar a colleague.” (Ronald J. - Stanton apologized, and his spokeswoman said Stanton was on a boat in Utah. “Stanton apologized Friday in a post on Twitter. A spokeswoman said he appeared from Utah, where he was visiting family, and was on a boat. ‘There’s no getting around it: I messed up and I’m sorry for it. I participated in the five-hour markup mostly from inside and went outside to watch my kids (while listening in the entire time) shortly before the vote was called,’ Stanton said.” (Ronald J.
