Shomari Figures Will Empower The Democrat Socialists Who Want To Abolish Capitalism And Put The Government In Control And Ownership Of Every Part Of Your Life, Including Your House, Your Job And Your Transportation

In January 2025, Shomari Figures Voted For Hakeem Jeffries For Speaker. (Roll Call 2, Johnson 218; Jeffries 215; Emmer 1; Figures Voted Jeffries, 1/3/25)

In June 2026, Jeffries “Publicly Embraced” Members Of The Democratic Socialists Of America. “House Minority Leader Hakeem Jeffries publicly embraced a new crop of congressional nominees Saturday, including three Democratic Socialists of America-backed candidates whose primary victories have fueled fresh debate over the Democratic Party's leftward shift ahead of the 2026 midterms. The powerful New York lawmaker's post highlights the challenge facing the top House Democrat as he works to unite his party ahead of the general election. If Democrats take back the House in November, Jeffries is expected to become the next speaker. That means he'll likely be leading a Democratic caucus with more self-described democratic socialists than ever before. So far, more than a dozen Democratic Socialists of America-backed candidates have won or advanced in primaries across the country this election cycle.” (Elaine Mallon And Andrew Mark Miller, “Jeffries Welcomes Democratic Socialists Into The Fold As Critics Warn Party Is Revealing ‘Exactly Who It Is,’” Fox News, 6/27/26)

Multiple Democratic Socialists Have Won Democratic Primaries During The 2026 Election Cycle. “The 120th Congressional Session poses a new opportunity to go beyond the informality of the Squad: a real Democratic Socialist bloc in Congress with a shared program and more closely coordinated approach. The elections of Chris Rabb, Claire Valdez, Darializa Avila Chevalier, Melat Kiros, and most recently Donovan McKinney, translated super-majoritarian support for democratic socialist demands like Medicare for All, Abolishing ICE, and enacting an arms embargo on Israel to real electoral victories, expanding Democratic Socialist representation in Congress from two to seven. Remaining in this cycle is Oliver Larkin, DSA cadre running in Florida who recently went viral for bringing up Trump and the Epstein files on Fox News, and who is facing hundreds of thousands in corporate PAC money.” (Oren Schweitzer, “The Democratic Socialists Are Coming To Congress In 2027,” Socialist Call, 8/17/26)

NOTE: Democratic Socialists will almost certainly be part of any Democratic majority in Congress in 2027.

The Democratic Socialists Of America Have Wrote That They “Cannot Accept” Capitalism’s Conception Of The Free And Private Market. “We cannot accept capitalism’s conception of economic relations as ‘free and private,’ because contracts are not made among economic equals and because they give rise to social structures which undemocratically confer power upon some over others. Such relationships are undemocratic in that the citizens involved have not freely deliberated upon the structure of those institutions and how social roles should be distributed within them (e.g., the relationship between capital and labor in the workplace or men and women in child rearing). We do not imagine that all institutional relations would wither away under socialism, but we do believe that the basic contours of society must be democratically constructed by the free deliberation of its members.” (Joseph Schwartz and Jason Shulman, “Toward Freedom: Democratic Socialist Theory and Practice,” Democratic Socialists Of America, 12/21/12)

Socialism Would Institute Government Takeovers Of Major Parts Of The Economy. “Socialism is a system of government takeover: public ownership or control replacing private ownership across major parts of the economy.” (“What Is Socialism?” Americans For Prosperity, 9/15/26)

Socialism Could Abolish Private Property. “The goal of socialism is to increase personal property many times over, through the abolishment of private property.” (Deirdre Griswold, “Exploding Myths: Capitalism, Socialism & Personal Property,” Workers World, 10/31/08)

Socialism Could Abolish The Labor Market. “The second thing was abolition of the market. Why? Well, partly they thought if you do away with private property, it automatically means doing away with the market because those two things went together. But there was an independent argument for this as well, which is that markets, such as the labor market and market for goods, end up being harmful to people’s wellbeing. The case against the labor market is obvious. What’s the labor market? It’s people having to essentially sell their own labor power for a price, the way you sell any good for a price. Why is that bad? It’s because everybody’s fortunes and ability to get the money they need to get food, shelter, water, and other essential things are dependent on finding a job. And you may or may not find a job. There’s no guarantee. What socialists said was that if getting the goods you need to survive depends on getting a job, that’s fundamentally unjust because no one asks to be born. Once you’re born, you should have a right to certain basic goods, certain basic needs being met. And so the labor market should not exist. What should exist is the provision of jobs, the provision of employment, but that should come as a right. It shouldn’t be left up to the winds.” (Vivek Chibber, Substack, “How Socialism Could Really Work,” Confronting Capitalism, 5/1/26)

In Societies Controlled By Socialist Principles, The Government Would Have Control Over Transportation. “Socialist systems tend to have robust welfare systems, and governments often play a major role in providing essential services such as healthcare, education, and transportation. The government determines the output and pricing levels of these goods and services.” (Will Kenton, “Understanding Socialism: History, Theory, and Modern Examples,” Investopedia, 4/29/26)
